Response Planning Tools

Eliminating Key Parts of America's National Monuments is an Assault on our Public Lands
Talking Points and Messaging Guidance for Post-Recommendations

Introduction: The following talking points are for you to create customizable language to be tailored for individual monuments and scenarios.

Overarching messages for National Monuments Review recommendations response (8/24 or later):

There are three major talking points that will be used for all monuments under attack, and they should be included in communications following Zinke's recommendation. CLF press statements, op-eds, social media, and other communications tactics will center around these primary points, which can be supported by other supplementary messages being developed.

Individual Friends Groups with monuments under threat are working on additional messaging specific to their state and scenario, and have worked with the CLF Field Team to identify spokespeople for each of these places under direct threat.

Other Friends Groups whose monuments are unaffected, and Friends Groups who steward a place not designated as a monument, can focus on the values of their own place, tied to the common values of the National Conservation Lands (Theme 1) and the "Attack on one is an attack on all" message from Theme 2, and tie further to the "Americans support national monuments and all of the National Conservation Lands (Theme 3.)

1) The Values

National Monuments and/or National Conservation Lands are part of the fabric of America. They provide clean water to millions, contain sites sacred to Native American Tribes, are critical to rural economies, offer opportunities for solitude, are important places for veterans to heal, tell the stories of ALL Americans and help drive tourism and an $887 billion recreation economy. Tailor for region and audience as appropriate.

2) The Legal Challenge

Depending on what the recommendation is, the next point after values should be:

- This recommendation/action is illegal and will be challenged in court
- OR
- This review was arbitrary and unnecessary

AND if appropriate (for non-monument or non-impacted monument group/region),

- ○ An attack on one is an attack on all

3) A Reckless Administration

The Trump Administration's review ignores science, the law, and the will of the American people, including over 2.5 million comments supporting keeping our national monuments intact. Americans have demonstrated overwhelming support for national monuments / protected public lands / the National Conservation Lands.
